PAST AND PRESENT. It seems to be the fashion, now,

To plunder and to steal;

To love Rome less and Casar more, Has now become genteel. They had a way in ancient days Of guarding fairs of state, That might be well in modern times

For us to imitate. I wish we had a Vesta, now, Our sacred rights to guard; Some one as pure and faithful, too, Corruption to retard.

I wish that all who office take, Like Vesta had to serve;

And like her, too, the forfeit pay If ever they deserve. More dear to us than money is, Our country ought to be; Then why not prize its honor more

And guard its liberty. O, where are all our honest men, Our statesmen brave and true? They all, like Rip, have slumbered long, And things have gone askew.

Their aching hearts to quell;
And while they've slept the Devil's come
To guard the citadel, Mothinks I see a little band A landing on our shore;

And now they stand on Plymouth Rock

They must have took some "montain dew,

As once they did before. They've come to greet their children here, At freedom's open gate; Alas! that they should ever find Them so degenerate.

I see them as they weeping go, They're passing out of sight: And now they've gone, I'll vanish, too, And leave you in afright. -Brooklyn Argus,
